TALES FROM THE DARK SIDE

An unsuspecting janitor came across a naked man who was watching pornographic videos booo nude in a classroom on a hot night earlier this spring. Campus police later caught him after he fled across campus. The incident was among several wild and unique news stories that hit the campus this year / Daily photo illustration by Scott Robinson

The end is near

It was the Year of the 'Butt-Sniffer,' indeed. But he shares the spotlight with food bandits, a flatulent student and, ahem, other people.

By Len Arends
Daily Assistant Managing Editor

In a relatively quiet term, there were still moments this year that jumped from the printed page as downright odd.

Some stories, like the saga of alleged buttock sniffer David Potter Lawler, have been lingering all year. Others, like the tale of biology junior Todd Tuggle and his abused abdomen, are as recent as yesterday's news.

But regardless of how old or fresh the material, these chosen few easily qualify for the depiction "unusual."

1. A nose for controversy

To think it all started seven months ago.

At the beginning of November, police said a female Cal Poly student was studying in the Kennedy Library when she realized a man was kneeling behind her chair, his face positioned close to her buttocks.

The man quickly moved away, but on Nov. 4, when she saw the same man again, she notified Public Safety.

Investigator Ray Berrett said he consequently observed David Potter Lawler, 41, of Santa Maria, kneel behind two seated women and sniff their buttocks.

Berrett said he approached Lawler and told him to leave campus, then filed a complaint against Lawler with the District Attorney's office.

In the intervening months, Lawler has appeared any number of times in San Luis Obispo County Municipal Court, initially pleading not guilty to three charges of attempted sexual battery.

But those charges were later dropped in exchange for a no contest plea on one count of loitering.

His sentencing date has since been delayed three times.

Public Safety Investigator Mike Kennedy said Thursday his understanding was that the judge in the case, James Ream, was postponing the sentencing while Lawler worked with a therapist.

2. Underdressed

Late in winter quarter, police said a janitor making his early morning rounds at Science North got the shock of his life when a man burst out of a classroom, completely naked, and ran out of the building.

According to Berrett, it was later determined that the man, identified only as a 22-year-old former Cal Poly student, was watching pornographic videotapes on a classroom monitor when he was disturbed by the approaching janitor.

The nude figure was next spotted streaking across

THE DARK SIDE: 1993-94

In ranking order, the weirdest stories that made ink this year:

1. On hands and knees — Taking perversion to all new lows.
2. Hot stuff — A Cal Poly janitor got a big, naked surprise.
3. Excuse me? — A Cal Poly student said he was discriminated against after being expelled for his sound effects and other habits.
4. Green shirts, half off — That's all there is to it.
5. Auto-erotism — Public displays of self-love continued.
6. 10-items-or-less crime wave — Breadsticks, ice cream and beef jerky bandits strike Cal Poly students.
7. Peek-a-boo — Unwanted looky-loos strolled into the dorms.
8. Ouch! — An alleged thief sinks his teeth into his work.

campus by a Campus Watch patrol, Berrett said.

A suspect was eventually located in his car in a campus parking lot, Berrett said. And he said he had no problem telling the man was a suspect.

"There he was in the car — naked," Berrett said. No charges stemmed from the incident.

3. Raising a stink

Former teaching credential program member John Demerjian, 45, apparently didn't get along with his fellow classmates.

According to statements made by Demerjian in September, he was drummed out of the program for his flatulence in class, among other insensitive and antisocial actions. Students and instructors also complained about his using the department telephone for personal business and making a disparaging comment about homosexuals.

Demerjian appealed the decision to the university's Fairness Board in spring 1993, which decided in favor of the department.

Fetzer's tenure bid falls short

Students say decision is another example of racial inequities; prof says he'll appeal

By Silas Lyons
Daily Investigative Editor

The President's Office on Wednesday denied tenure to political science professor Phil Fetzer, giving him one year's notice to find other employment.

Popular with many students and several faculty members close to racial issues for his vigorous support of multiculturalism, Fetzer released a written statement declaring his intention to appeal the decision.

The statement was read at a press conference Thursday in the Multi-Cultural Center. The conference's panel included several members from the Ad Hoc Committee to Support Phil Fetzer for Tenure and students who recently have been leaders in organizing rallies and meetings on racial issues.

"I want to thank everyone who has, by word and deed, acted on my behalf during this difficult time," Fetzer wrote in the statement, which was read by philosophy professor Laurence Houlgate. "I have earned tenure. I will pursue appropriate remedies. I am confident that the truth will eventually emerge."

Both President Warren Baker and Vice President for Academic Affairs Robert Koob — who actually signed the letter denying tenure — were unavailable for comment Thursday.

However, their decision was clear from the letter sent to Fetzer.

"It would not be in the best interests of the university to continue your instructional assignment beyond next year," the letter signed by Koob stated. "It is with regret that I must formally notify you by means of this letter that your services with the university will terminate on June 10, 1995 and that you will have no further re-employment rights."

Fetzer has one year, on the terms of this agreement, to begin looking for another job.

However, a collective bargaining agreement between faculty and the CSU does offer hope for an appeal.

$90,000 meted out as Board wraps up year

By Pamela Slaughter
Daily Staff Writer

Continuing its push to wrap up ASI business, the Board of Directors on Wednesday approved money to be spent out of excess Union Executive Committee funds.

During its last meeting of the year, the Board approved a $90,000 expenditure to be used to upgrade campus lighting and sound systems. In addition, it approved the contract for new ASI Executive Director Polly Harrigan and voted to keep the Rose Float Committee in its University Union office.

"This is equipment for all of ASI to use and all of the student body to use," said Troy Riewe, supervising technician for ASI Audio Visual Services.

The money for the upgrades comes from funds leftover in the Union Executive Committee budget. Additional surplus money from that budget will be used to build the $55,000 sand volleyball courts behind the Rec Center.

ASI Audio Visual Services and the Program Board plan to upgrade the systems over three years. The Meeting of minds proves difficult for Clinton, Pope

By Victor L. Simpson
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — President Clinton sought to find common ground with Pope John Paul II in defending family values but conceded Thursday that "genuine disagreements" over birth control and abortion may be unbridgeable.

The pope was unbudging during his 40-minute meeting with Clinton in the papal library, and the Vatican focused on the core of their differences. Clinton, at a later news conference, emphasized what they could agree on.

Calling it a "profound honor" to be at the Vatican, the president reached out to Roman Catholics, praising the commitment of the 950 million-member Church and its clergy.

Clinton's meeting with the pope was described by Vatican officials as "cordial," meaning John Paul didn't wave his finger at the president but firmly stood his ground. The pope is a resolute opponent of abortion and contraception.

DARK SIDE: '93-'94 marked by odd crimes which often led to ineffectual arrests

So in September, the former student filed a $1 million lawsuit, which is still pending, according to Nancy Vilkitis, a university official.

4. Underdressed: Part II

In another instance of overexposure, an unidentified man wearing nothing but a green, hooded shirt leapt from the bushes near the Farm Shop Feb. 4, startling a Cal Poly student.

Police said the student immediately ran away and notified police — the flasher did not follow her.

According to Investigator Kennedy, several suspects riding bicycles who matched the flasher's description were stopped that evening. None panned out.

One suspect spotted at long range by parking attendants, who followed the bicyclist to the 1300 block of Foothill Boulevard before losing sight.

No progress has since been made in the case, Kennedy said.

5. Private matters, public lives

Cal Poly seemed to have some real problems with people who kept too much to themselves this year. The Daily reported three cases involving men masturbating in plain view of others on or near campus. One of the incidents also raised some troubling questions about the safety and communication among the campus residence halls.

This case was reported by women living in Yosemite residence hall, who said they discovered an unidentified man masturbating in their communal bathroom on the evening of Nov. 3.

The man left without incident, and the women posted a note on their resident adviser's door. When the RA discovered the note the next day, she reported the incident to Yosemite's coordinator for student development. Because of the elapsed time since the event, it was decided not to report the incident to Public Safety.

But on Nov. 5, a sighting of a man matching the first man's description was reported to police by a student in another dorm.

Housing Director Preston Allen said at the time that communication with authorities could have been better.

"What we could have done differently is call (Public Safety) so they could put an alert on a campus level," he said.

The next incident came a month later, involving another unidentified man driving around campus parking lots while masturbating.

Two women reported to Public Safety they saw the man on Dec. 1 in the H-12 and H-16 parking lots. Although the women provided a license plate number, efforts to connect the number with a suspect were fruitless, according to Kennedy.

The last report of masturbation arose in late winter quarter, again involving a car.

Police said a Cal Poly student observed the suspect masturbating in his car parked on Pacheco Way just south of campus. He was described only as an Atascadero man in his mid-30s.

Police said they contacted the suspect, but did not detain him. Investigator Kennedy said no charges were ever filed against the man.

6. Ever been so hungry ... ?

Muggings for food seemed to be a crime of choice during winter quarter.

First, on the evening of Feb. 4, ornamental horticulture freshman Bradley Collart was walking to Yosemite Hall on Hathway Street south of campus. He had just picked up some snack food at the store.

Then, at the intersection of Hathway and Kentucky streets, Collart said a pickup truck pulled along side him. He said he was talking to the occupants in the back when another, unseen passenger dashed toward Collart, stole his bag of groceries and jumped into the bed of the truck.

The truck then pulled away, never to be seen again.

Collart's loss — $6 in ice cream and breadsticks.

A more serious incident followed a few weeks later.

Crop science sophomore Patrick John Williams said he was walking from his apartment in Mustang Village to a party at the Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity on California Boulevard on the evening of Feb. 26.

As he was crossing the railroad tracks, he said he was apparently knocked out by an assailant who approached from behind. He remained unconscious for two hours.

When he awoke, he discovered he had been relieved of the pound of beef jerky and six-pack of beer he had been bringing to the party, as well as $65 from his wallet.

Although he said no suspect has been found in the case, Williams felt he has actually benefited from the experience.

"It's brought my relationship with my family and my two roommates much closer," he said.

He said the incident made him more aware of his own mortality.

ASI: 'Yes' to Rose Float office and Polly Harrigan, 'no' to Auto Center

$90,000 will pay for the first year of upgrades.

Steve Steinhauer, ASI vice president for operations and UEC chair, said he supported the allotment of the money.

"The equipment can be used to bring some culture to this town," Steinhauer said.

In other ASI business, the Board:

Allowed the Rose Float Committee to keep its office

The board voted not to take over the Rose Float Committee office.

A proposal had been made more than a month ago to put the Board of Directors in the office currently occupied by the Rose Float Committee.

But at Wednesday's meeting, 15 to 20 Rose Float Committee members voiced concerns to the board over moving the club to another office.

"(In fall) we're in full swing and we do need to be somewhere where people can get in touch with us," said Rose Float Committee Chair Steven James.

Steinhauer was in charge of looking for an office for the Board of Directors.

"Realistically, that was the best alternative for the board, but I can understand Rose Float's (reservations)," Steinhauer said.

Approved a contract for the new ASI executive director

The board approved the contract to hire Harrigan, who currently is interim executive director, as executive director.

Part-time chemistry lecturer Gail Wilson, who opposed Harrigan's appointment, presented more than 1,000 petition signatures asking for a repeal of the decision to hire Harrigan. She wanted to see the decision put to a student vote.

But ASI President Marquam Pirois said the decision was not something that could or needed to be put to a student vote.

Voted to keep the Auto Center closed

Despite a petition and requests by students to consider reopening the ASI Auto Center, the Board unanimously voted to keep the Center closed.

John HUBBELL The beautiful sound of music

When I was about 12, I had my first official job. I was a rock picker.

I was supposed to circle a seven-furlong horse race track at the Solano County Fair in Vallejo and search for rocks, embedded deep and elusive in the amber soil. Six days a week for hours, I would circle the track under sun or cloud on my mission to free Solano County of hidden rocks.

Worst was the blackbirds. They lived in the thick of pines along the backstretch, and were extremely protective of their nests. As I'd approach they would swoop down with amazing velocity and acumen, pecking and clawing at my head. This ritual dragged on for a few months.

So as my time at The Daily comes to a close, and people have asked me for some kind of grand, introspective thought, I have said only thank you, and this: This job, I think, was much better than that rock-picking job. The hours were worse but the pay was slightly better. And I am now ready to walk down the stairs and through the doors, and into the warm sunset and the coastal breeze, again.

In the end, I'd like to tell a story about my friends and begin with Donna, who has no idea this is coming.

We're old high school friends, Donna and I, but we've hardly ever seen each other since arriving here in 1990. She's been immersed in her music studies and music lessons, and I've worked at The Daily for two-and-a-half years. We met for coffee once in 1992; I saw her briefly over Christmas. This is what has passed as our friendship for years.

Last week, we had a beer together downtown. We talked and told stories and laughed and reminisced and looked forward. It was great.

So when it came time to promise to attend her senior piano recital ("You're coming, right?") I quickly agreed.

At the same time, the Daily won a significant award for its coverage of the AIDS epidemic. And so I was supposed to join two other editors in San Diego to accept the award. Of course, on the same day.

For several days, I wrestled with my obligations. Donna. The newspaper. Friends on both sides. What's a guy to do?

I thought of my friends in the news business, and what they would do. I thought of my workaholic editorial board; my writing coach and prophet Herb Kamm, who taught me such phrases as "tit in a wringer" (i.e. "Well, John, you've really got your tit in a ringer now!") that go a bit lower but say, oh, so much more. Would Herb be there for his friend or accept another award?

Then I remembered being downtown at Bull's Tavern one night and bumping into a former staff writer. "Oh my GOD!" she exclaimed. Turned out seeing me with a beer in my hand downtown was about as astonishing for her as seeing Santa Claus, the Easter Bunny and Mister Rogers in a strip club. Her face read, "Isn't that the guy who I always see at work?"

So I thought. And thought. And thought. Donna won. This is my grand philosophical point for the year. Donna won.

It seems like a fitting end to my editorship, and I'm rather happy with it. I learned plenty as the Daily's editor — saw a lot of good things and bad, worked with a lot of good people and bad, and took tons from it. The lessons were all important, but they're really not worth getting into. I think you have to learn them for yourself.

But the final one was the most important, I think, and deserves a public airing. When your friend plays the piano, I learned, you be there. You listen.

• John Hubbell was the Daily's editor in chief.

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

Hitting snooze with nothing to lose

By Kristina Van Saun

Is it that time already? I know I've been asking myself that question a lot lately. And I'm not just talking about finals next week, or the fact that yet another quarter is coming to a close.

I'm talking about sleep! The part of our lives we never seem to get enough of — especially college students.

It's not just that special relationship we have with our beds, our pillows and for some, stuffed animals (you know who you are), that keeps us loyal to our need for sleep. But the enemy disturbs us from such quiet serenity: The alarm clock strikes.

I know I'm not alone in my quest to uncover the mystery of what I call "alarm clock psychology." There are a lot of you out there that maybe are reluctant to admit it, but you've tricked yourself and your alarm clock at one time or another into sleeping just a little bit longer.

It's called the "snooze game," a daily morning ritual we go through just to buy more time.

The snooze bar (or on some mornings with a splitting headache, it's more commonly referred to as the "booze" bar), has certainly become my best friend over the years. At least, that's what it thinks.

You see, the alarm clock's job is to remind you when you need to get up. But the way I see it, no friend of mine is going to tell me what to do!

In this game, there are no teams, it's just one-on-one. You against your alarm clock. What will be the outcome in today's match? Will you let it win? Can you outsmart your opponent? Like digits on the alarm clock, so are the mornings of our lives!

There are two positions to play in the snooze game: The authority and the rebel.

The alarm clock plays the authority figure, the stand-in for your mother who's not there anymore to come into your room to tell you to get up. The only difference is that with the alarm clock, there's finally room for negotiation ... although it still won't do your laundry.

The other game player is you: The rebel. Only in this game, you do have a cause, a goal to meet, a game to win! But you are the rebel because you defy authority, the alarm clock screams in your ear forcing you out of dreamland, and you refuse to let it take you over.

That's the other thing I can't stand about alarm clocks — the noise! My fire alarm has a siren quieter than some alarm clocks I've heard.

As for me, my alarm clock and I have an understanding. It can have the right to remind me to wake up, as long as it gives me some useful information while I am doing it. I have a clock radio. After the Mack truck-sounding alarm I used to own, I decided this would be much better. So out it went down to alarm clock hell. However, for now I've compromised by saving my sanity, yet dealing with reality.

But that's this week! Next week, who knows? Maybe I'll sleep in and ponder the issue some more.

Hey, look at it this way: The more sleep you do get, the better you'll do on your finals, and don't let your alarm clock tell you different. Just say "no!"

Stop paying lip service to diversity

Once again, another year has passed and students of color have expressed their frustration in regards to Cal Poly's lack of cultural pluralism.

We have all heard the expression that "history repeats itself," and Cal Poly's racial inequity repeats itself as well.

Last week concerned students held a demonstration to show their support for Phil Fetzer. Once again, we saw a situation where you have an open-minded professor being accessible to the student voice but being denied tenure because of his ideas of bringing about civil rights and diversity on campus.

"My three years at Cal Poly have given me a very well-rounded education. I have learned that this institution promotes racism ... People like Fetzer are needed at this campus because of that."

It is time for students to ask themselves what the next step is. Some of us have been involved since our freshman year and it is very discouraging to see that nothing changes.

My three years at Cal Poly have given me a very well-rounded education. I have learned that this institution promotes racism. Many people find it hard to understand that a lot of times students of color have to deal with at this campus. It is time for administrators to do their jobs and serve the people they are here to serve — the students.

Cal Poly needs to realize it is no longer in the Dark Ages and that this state's demographics are changing. It is time for this institution to begin to analyze what their definition of education is.

People like Fetzer are needed at this campus because of that. It is time for this institution to stop paying lip service to diversity and act on their promises. If you support diversity, prove it. Keep Phil Fetzer at Cal Poly.

A No it's not Elmer Fudd. It's Sports Information Director Eric McDowell

B No it's not the lead singer for Whitesnake. It's men's soccer coach Wolfgang Gartner

C No it's not the Hunchback of Notre Dame. It's Poly's male Athlete of the Year Jake Gaeir.

D No it's not Billie Jean King. It's former Assistant Athletics Director Marilyn McNeil

E No it's not Joey Buttafuoco. It's Roseville native Brad Hamilton, we think.

F No it's not Opie Taylor. It's Athletics Director John McCutcheon.

G No it's not Bo Derek. It's Poly's female Athlete of the Year Kelley Bannon.

H No it's not Charles Manson or Grover from Sesame Street. It's just some Hamilton wannabe.

HAMILTON: Some egos exceeded points per game averages started talking about the game Clue and Professor Plum in the conservatory with a candlestick.

Award: Coach I would most want to jog alongside in the Bay to Breakers, dressed as Colonel Mustard and Mrs. White.

Men's Soccer's Wolfgang Gartner: The name says it all. Any coach that signs a kid's autograph midway through a soccer game is tops on my list. I also really get a kick out of his emphasis on having fun more than winning.

I might not name my kids after him, but a dog or even a goldfish is a definite.

Award: Coach I would most like to pub hop in Germany, Austria, England, Poland, France ...

Women's Soccer's Alex Crozier: This guy kicked my tail in my Scrimmage Line game and even returned a message during an award banquet which he was named Division II Coach of the Year. He is simply one of the all-around nicest guys I have ever dealt with.

Award: Coach I would most like to accompany to church or an eagle scout meeting.

Football's Andre Patterson: This man has been extremely courteous and enjoyable to speak with every time I have spoken with him — even when I called him at his house late one night and a kid was screaming in the background.

Award: Coach I would most likely baby-sit for — including diaper changes for any little ones he might have — even during the Super Bowl. He is also going to be the first person I call if I need someone to talk me out of committing suicide, kicking my dog or whatever.

Women's Basketball's Jill Orrock: I never once had a problem with Orrock except my massacring of her name. A simple name pronounced O•rock, but not for me. Heck, I called her O•rick, the Spanish version O•rrrrrock and several other mispronunciations that cannot be attributed to any other language.

She was always courteous no matter how bad her season was going — and it did get pretty bad with all the injuries the team had to suffer.

Award: First coach that will suffer a shattered leg from stubbing her toe on a duffel bag, which would not be a surprise the way the team's 1993-94 campaign unfolded.

Wrestling's Lennis Cowell: Although it seemed I routinely screwed up a fact or two in every wrestling story, he was the most complimentary coach I dealt with. And when you are being called Mr. Sports, City Slicker and other stupid names snivlers could think of who took me a little too seriously, compliments are definitely refreshing.

Award: Coach I would most like to preside as judge in my next libel suit filed by some cross-dressing cowboy that felt his feelings were hurt by one of my columns.

Volleyball's Craig Cummings: A year ago I probably would have named him my favorite coach. But since then a lot has changed. Ever since I wrote a crappy headline for a volleyball story in the fall, our relationship soured and never returned to the way it was when he made my quarter by giving me a volleyball t-shirt in Fall 1992.

Award: Coach most like my last girlfriend, who dumped me for a minor and stupid thing I said just one time.

Tennis' Chris Eppright: I appreciated his candid behavior and comments that enhanced almost every tennis story. The guy is so mellow and kick back, but I would put money on him knocking one of Cal Poly's opponents on their butt before any of his players would toss down the rackets and put up their fists.

Award: Coach I would most like to go bar hopping with and make fun of people.

Track's Brooks Johnson: When he is not too busy to treat you like a human being, he is one of the most pleasurable persons to speak with. His insight on ethnic diversity was much appreciated.

Award: Coach I would most like to accompany to a Ku Klux Klan convention and bang some white trash heads around.

Swimming's Rich Firman: The guy impressed me with a card he sent congratulating me on being selected as sports editor last year. He's a super nice guy and extremely helpful considering he doesn't have a home phone number available. It is unfortunate he heads the sport that is treated like the redhead stepchild in the department.

Award: Coach most likely to shave his entire body to motivate his swimmers.

Softball's Lisa Boyer: After the first time she snapped at me for interviewing her between doubleheader games, she was an extreme pleasure to deal with.

Except I still suspect she told her pitcher Tricia Waayers to pitch one close to my chin. But I got over it.

Award: Coach I would most want to help steal a Harley and hang out with in Las Vegas for a weekend.

And as for the players I had to deal with over the quarters:

Most were easy to deal with, but the ones that had the huge egos like Shanta Cotright, Damien Levesque, Marc Townes, Dan Berkeland and Rich Kubec were a pain.

These guys have me questioning whether I want to continue working with people that are so egotistical about playing a damn game — essentially, a meaningless activity that has no more significance than to simply amuse people.

But then it's people like Leo Williams, Ryshiem Henderson, Matt Drake, Kelley Bannon, Jake Gaeir, Leo Vera, Carrie Schmidt, Jennifer Lacovera, Marc Ollivier and others that keep me encouraged to achieve my career goal and serve the Sacramento Bee as a sports columnist.

So, this is the end — my only friend the end. I am out of here and heading for my place under the sun — Roseville.

FETZER: Popular professor loses tenure bid

According to Michael Suess, director for faculty affairs, Fetzer can take one of two tracks in seeking a further review of his performance.

He can either ask for a hearing in which three faculty members would review his files or he can get the endorsement of his union to pay for a formal arbitration hearing by a professional arbitrator.

In both scenarios, a recommendation for solving the matter would be returned to Baker's office for a final consideration.

Gaining tenure is based on meeting four criteria: professional development, teaching ability, service to the university community and "other factors."

Koob cited deficiencies in teaching ability and professional growth as reasons for not granting tenure in this case.

Members of the faculty committee supporting Fetzer who were present for the press conference felt differently about whether the decision was expected.

"I really felt Baker would support us," foreign languages professor Gloria Velasquez said. "I want to always believe in the goodwill of people."

History professor Don Grinde was more cynical.

"I wasn't surprised," he said.

Both agreed recent marches and meetings in support of Fetzer have been appropriate to a college atmosphere.

Statements to the contrary simply take attention away from the real issue, which is racial e-

"I want to thank everyone who has, by word and deed, acted on my behalf during this difficult time. I have earned tenure. I will pursue appropriate remedies. I am confident that the truth will eventually emerge."

Phil Fetzer

Political science professor quality, they said.

"That's victimizing the victim," Grinde said. He added that going public with an issue like this is the only recourse available to a minority opinion at Cal Poly.

"Social change began in the streets," Velasquez said.

Fetzer has run a high profile during his stay at Cal Poly, most notably organizing Civil Rights Awareness Week.

The press conference — held during U.U. Hour and attended by most local media — came exactly a week after more than 60 students marched a circuit around campus crusading for several diversity issues to be addressed, including Fetzer's tenure.

Also discussed at the press conference was the formation of a standardized racial harassment policy. Similar to the sexual harassment policy now in place, it would specifically define acts of racism and their repercussions.

DARK SIDE: Peekers, biting thieves on list

"Life is a lot more fun and enjoyable, now," he said.

7. Peeking in showers

On Feb. 10, police apprehended a man, identified only as a 19-year-old Oceano resident, and ordered him off campus for watching women shower in a Sierra Madre women's bathroom the day before.

Police said they were tipped off to the man's presence by a second report in another Sierra Madre women's shower. A showering student recognized the suspect from a description which had been circulated immediately following the initial incident.

No charges were filed against the suspect, according to Investigator Kennedy. But the incident proved rapid communication is possible.

8. Mouthful of trouble

On May 6, a Cal Poly student pursued and detained a man attempting to steal his and a roommate's bicycles.

Biology junior Todd Tuggle said he and roommate Nils Blomquist were walking to their home on Fredericks Street when they came across Mario Burke, 31, lying on a neighbor's lawn with their bicycles.

Tuggle said he chased Burke for several blocks, then wrestled Burke to the ground near Murray Street Station. In his attempt to get away, Burke bit Tuggle on the stomach.

Burke has been arraigned and has pleaded not guilty to burglary and assault with a deadly weapon other than a firearm. A preliminary hearing is set for June 8.

GAEIR: Wrestler sees Sea World in his future next to Nationals, Gaeir said. Later that year, he won fourth in the PAC 10s and cracked the top 16 of the nation. But that wasn't good enough for him, he said. He wanted to be in the top eight.

And he came back stronger and more mature in his junior year, winning his first PAC 10 Championship. But an injured ankle prevented him from cracking the Top Eight at Nationals.

And in his final year of eligibility, Gaeir thundered through numerous opponents on his way to his best record at Cal Poly — 38-3. He also repeated a PAC 10 Championship in front of a Mott Gym crowd. And despite losing his first match in the Nationals, he came back, winning his last six matches of his collegiate career which placed him third in the nation.

His third-place finish earned him All-American status.

Cowell reflected on the year and the changes he saw in Gaeir.

"I think this was the year he finally mentally believed in himself," Cowell said.

Cowell said the program is going to miss Gaeir, but he hopes Gaeir will come back to help coach the Mustangs.

Gaeir said he feels pretty confident that he may return, but he has other goals that he must accomplish first.

"I've always wanted to coach," Gaeir said. "I've always liked to tell people what to do and impose my technique on everybody."

But Gaeir, a part-time employee of Sea World, plans to graduate this June and get his teaching credential. From there, he plans to pursue a career in marine mammal studies and hopefully become a full-time employee at Sea World.

As for Gaeir's wrestling future, he said he will always participate either as a coach or a competitor — possibly in freestyle with a World or Olympic Championship on the line.

ment but said the loss shouldn't result in a lapse in gender equity.

"I don't think that would happen because I think that ... people who make decisions — (Athletics Director) John McCutcheon and other people at the top — (support) women's sports," Fawcett said. "We don't have good ol' boys at the top of our network but it still hurts without a woman there."

Athletics Director John McCutcheon said he, along with an eight member committee, screened a number of applicants from all over the country to fill the position.

After a series of meetings, reference checks and recommendations, the committee chose 15 finalists.

The start of the search began in mid-April, about the time of McNeil's departure. The position was advertised for four weeks and drew 58 applicants, McCutcheon said.

The committee on Thursday will begin more rigorous and thorough interviews with the finalists and within a few weeks a smaller group will be recommended to McCutcheon. McCutcheon will decide on one person and President Warren Baker will extend the appointment, McCutcheon said.

McCutcheon and the committee, half of which are women, were looking for someone with a broad background in compliance and eligibility and a strong commitment to athletics, McCutcheon said.

He also explained they were looking for someone who had experience in Division I level programs along with a good deal of understanding of the components of Title IX, legislation assuring equal opportunities for women.

The position was described in the advertisement as "senior woman's administrator," but despite this, some men did apply. But all of the finalists are women, McCutcheon said.

McCutcheon also said the move to Division I has prompted the department to hire another person, in addition to an associate athletics director, to tackle all the tasks McNeil used to perform.

"We are also hiring a compliance and eligibility specialist," McCutcheon said. "Previously Marilyn had to wear both of those hats. No one person could do those jobs in Division I effectively."

In addition to all her hard work and capability, both Fawcett and Stanhill expressed their admiration for McNeil's personal character.

"Marilyn was a very strong individual," Fawcett said.

McNeil was unavailable for comment.

VOLLEYBALL: Winning a national title means the men's volleyball team will play Division I club competition next year

"We all came together, just to win and play our best," said senior Nick Pastore. "Everyone pulled together. We wanted it more than anyone else."

Pastore added that initiative and a will to win helped the team achieve national status.

In the three-day championship tournament, which took place April 14 through April 16 on the Arizona State campus, Cal Poly defeated such teams as Boston College, Tri-State University, Rice University, Wisconsin-Lacrosse and Cortland College.

Senior Jim Noe said team camaraderie and strong skills were essential elements to the team's national victory.

"In every position we were strong — strong hitting, strong setting," Noe said. "There's a lot of respect for everyone on the court. It's quite a diverse group of guys, but basically it was the teamwork."

As a result of winning the

"In every position we were strong."

Jim Noe
Senior Volleyball Player

Northern California Collegiate Volleyball League with a 24-6 record, the team will begin competing at Division I in 1995.

Since its beginnings in the 1970s, the team has competed with high caliber Division I clubs such as UC-Berkeley, Chico State and UC-Santa Cruz.

Team President Jeff Zook, a senior, said the teams Cal Poly competes with are the best in the nation.

"It's always been tough teams," he said. "California teams are usually the best in the nation because they are more organized."

Senior Chris Underwood said he likes the challenges these teams have to offer.

"It gives a chance for students who aren't in a Division I school to compete against high-level teams in a competitive arena," he said. "There's nothing like playing a team that is better or equally as good as you."

Team members said that their chances for success in 1995 look promising, especially with the addition of a coach.

"With a coach, I think we'll play that much better," Noe said. "There's a lot of talent in the school, it's just a matter of pulling it together."

HAMILTONNO
Goal

I'm outta here; look out Roseville

This is the end. My only friend the end.
— Jim Morrison or the motto Richard Gere tries to push on his gerbil Reuben.

I forget. But anyway, here's one last column before I jump off this jet taking off for Division I.

And like the name of the column, I have no goal in mind for this piece, so let's just get silly.

I would like to share some of my memories and ideas I have gathered serving as the sports editor the last year and a sports writer the previous four quarters.

First of all here are my ideas of the Cal Poly head coaches and the awards I would give them:

Baseball's Kent Agler: This guy's straightforwardness made him one of my favorites. I knew this Clint Eastwood of coaches was cool when he stopped mid-sentence and spit a big juicer on the ground near my Generras.

Award: Coach I would most like to help knock off a roll of chew and a case of Lucky Lager on a four-day fishing trip to Lago De Texcoco in Mexico.

Baseball's Steve McFarland: Nice enough guy but he broke NCAA rules. Athletics Director John McCutcheon wants too much of a squeaky clean department to allow McFarland back. I sympathize with McFarland, his wife and his children, who I always watched run around the bases at Sinsheimer Stadium while I interviewed their father.

But he screwed up and gave his club an unfair advantage over other teams regardless of his claimed honest intentions. He should suffer the consequences and begin to search for another place to coach where I am sure he will be very good.

Award: Coach I would most like to be my landlord or be my financial aid assessor.

Men's Basketball's Steve Beason: This guy treated me with sincerity and made me feel like I was his friend until he admitted he didn't know my name after about the fifth interview I did with him. Also, the time he grabbed an opposing player who was pushing around Jeff Oliver impressed me.

Award: Coach most likely to be fired after he refers to his boss as Opie Taylor after working with McCutcheon for five years.

Track and Cross Country's Terry Crawford: It seemed like it took a long time to get a laugh and smile from her, but I knew she was a fun-loving person when we

Mr. Funk
ends career
near the top

By Brian Volk
Daily Staff Writer

They call him Mr. Funk. The 22-year-old Jake Gaeir has earned this title though, for it is more than a name. It is a term used to define his unique, unorthodox style of wrestling.

His flexible body, teamed with more than 16 years of experience in every maneuver imaginable, defines his special techniques described in the world of wrestling as "funky." Wrestling Coach Lennis Cowell says his pinning throws and low single leg attacks get him out of some of the strangest situations on the mat.

Gaeir, a biological sciences senior, finished his final season at Cal Poly as the third-ranked wrestler in the Division I nation — his top finish as a Mustang.

According to sports information records, the last time anyone scored with similar rankings was in 1978 when Scott Heaton placed third in the NCAA Nationals.

Gaeir has used his 150 pounds of muscle and determination over the past four years at Cal Poly wrestling to an overall record of 86-49, scoring two PAC 10 championships, winning two California Collegiate tournaments and placing first in the All-Star Classic.

As a freshman, the San Diego native admits he was not ready to step onto the mat. A year later, after red-shirting, he joined the team, and despite a slow start, won his first tournament in the California Collegiate Tournament.

His second year, he took sixth in Las Vegas, one of the toughest tournaments

The Gaeir File

Senior wrestler Jake Gaeir's four-year career includes the following successes:

- 1993 PAC 10 champion
- 1994 PAC 10 champion
- 1994 record of 38-3
- Finished third in 1994 Nationals
- Overall record of 86-49
- Won two California Collegiate tournaments
- Won 1994 All-Star Classic

Female athletes may feel bite of McNeil's flight

By Brian Volk
Daily Staff Writer

Two months after Cal Poly lost a leader in the movement for gender equity, sources around the Athletics Department said there are no signs of gender equity suffering a lapse on campus.

Former Associate Athletics Director Marilyn McNeil left Cal Poly after 15 years to serve as athletics director at Monmouth College in New Jersey.

Athletics Department Secretary Estelle Stanhill said she has seen no difference in gender equity since McNeil left.

"That remains to be seen," Stanhill said. "It depends on who we get to replace her. I don't think we would know that at this point."

Laura Fawcett worked for McNeil the past year. She is an intern for the National Association of Collegiate Women's Athletic Administrators (NACWAA), which McNeil is the president of.

Fawcett said she thinks most likely a woman will come in to fill the position. It affects things when a woman is not involved in budget, support services or any of the major decisions, Fawcett said.

"Marilyn was not in charge of women's sports but her role was to speak for the women athletes when necessary," Fawcett said. "We don't have that person right now."

Fawcett said it is important to have a female involved in decision making for the Athletics Department

Lone National Champs
Volleyball club brought Poly its only National title of the year

By Chris Rombouts
Daily Staff Writer

For the first time in its 20-year existence, the Cal Poly men's volleyball club won a national championship this year.

The team accomplished its unprecedented feat by beating Utah Valley State College 15-10, 12-15 and 15-8 in the Division II Intercollegiate Club National Championship on April 16 in Tempe, Ariz.
